Greco note: UFC.com's career figures for both include their Contender Series fights (Delano 8.43 SLpM; Magomedov 5.17 takedowns, submissions and knockdowns per 15). This brief uses Greco's UFC-only figures.

3. Style Clash (sourced, how they normally win)

Delano path: A Muay Thai-based striker who builds volume through three rounds. Against Ruchala he lost R1 on the numbers (21–25), then landed 86 to 42 over R2 and R3. Eight of his 17 wins are decisions; he has two five-round wins (Bilharinho, Stack).

Magomedov path: A finisher from a wrestling and grappling base. All 11 pro wins are stoppages, seven in R1. In the UFC he landed a takedown, controlled for 0:27 and finished with a twister at 1:17.

Central tension: Delano's slow-building pace against Magomedov's early finishes. Delano stuffed all three Ruchala takedown attempts, but has never faced a grappler with Magomedov's submission record. Magomedov has never been past 13:14 (UFC.com) and has never fought to a decision.

Physicals: Even. Both are orthodox with a 70" reach; Magomedov is an inch taller on UFC Stats. Delano is three years older with nine more pro fights.

Shared opponents: None.

4. Optimal Matchup Path (keys — not picks)

For Delano (Blue):

- Survive the opening minutes; Magomedov's last two fights ended at 1:37 and 1:17.
- Keep it standing and use body work and the clinch, where 31.8% and 21.5% of his UFC strikes landed.
- Take the fight into R2 and R3, where he landed 44 and 42 against Ruchala.
- Avoid scrambles that expose his back: his one submission loss was an anaconda choke.

For Magomedov (Red):

- Start fast, as he has in seven R1 finishes.
- Mix takedowns with strikes; Delano went 0 for 5 on takedowns himself, so he is likely to defend rather than wrestle.
- Hunt submissions from top and back control.
- Be ready for the later rounds he has never needed: he has no pro decision.

Expectation-break watch: (1) Magomedov past R1 for the first time in the UFC. (2) Delano's defensive grappling against a finisher-level grappler. (3) Magomedov as a big community favourite — he won as a +115 underdog on the Contender Series. (4) Delano's body work; his only knockout loss was to a body shot.
